Subject: Microsoft settlement

This is a unique situation where a company has grown large because it offers a worthwhile service. No one has to buy the service. Those of us that do have gotten our moneys worth. We like what Microsoft does and is doing.

This is a clear case of where the least government is the best government. If Microsoft was aggressively taking something of value from someone who did not want to give it up, then it would be a government matter.

Such is not the case. The government should apologize to the Microsoft Company and get on with reducing government influence in all of our lives.

Thank you,

Peggy and Ken Maultsby
